Directors: "Our film tells from a human point of view the unfinished story of the recognition and protection of indigenous territories in the Brazilian Amazon, a story whose countdown began more than sixty years ago, with the creation of the Xingu National Park. This documentary receives the exceptional testimonies of indigenous leaders from four different generations, including legendary chief Raoni Metuktire of the Kayapo people, with which the directors and producers have very strong personal ties going back several decades.

Major Brazilian and international witnesses also contribute to the film with exclusive interviews, including President Lula, explorer Sydney Possuelo (former president of the National Indian Foundation) and Jojo Mehta (Co-Founder & Executive Director, Stop Ecocide International) reminding us that the safeguarding of the Amazon has been a common story for more than 60 years."

Greens/EFA MEP Saskia Bricmont: "This documentary highlights the importance of fighting against deforestation, land-grabbing and corporate capture. Not only for the Amazon, which is crucial for the health of our planet, but also for the rights of indigenous people, who are true environmental guardians and who are under attack.

One key element in this fight is to stop the EU-Mercosur trade agreement, which will only worsen the current situation."
