The Rise of Gender-Based Violence and Decline of Sexual Reproductive Health and Rights

What Can We Do About It?

Gender-based violence (GBV) is a brutal human rights violation and an expression of the unequal power relations in our societies. Over 40% of women in Europe have survived gender-based violence.

In July 2023, after years of pressure from feminist activists and by active campaigning by the Greens/EFA Group, the European Parliament adopted its position for the first-ever European directive against gender-based violence. As the negotiations move to trilogues, the role of Member States to commit to EU-wide action against GBV increases.

Malta has ratified the Istanbul Convention and has adopted a number of legal and policy measures to combat GBV. However, a number of issues remain unresolved, in particular the criminal justice system.

In addition, Malta is the only country in Europe (alongside Andorra) to have a total ban on abortion. Wider international attempts to backslide women's rights through legislation and political attacks by anti-abortion politicians halt progress.

How can we make a difference both in national parliaments and at the international level to counter gender-based violence?

What can we learn from fellow advocates across Europe in promoting sexual and reproductive health and rights?

Join Green politicians, experts and human rights advocates for a discussion on how to collectively counter violence and make meaningful change together.

THE EVENT REQUIRES REGISTRATION.
