

Brussels, 1 August 2018

Dear President Tajani,

The recent tragic developments in the Central Mediterranean show how, now more than ever, the EU needs a successful and sustainable strategy on migration and asylum, based on the Member States' clear pledge to pursue the principle of common European responsibility and solidarity.

We are particularly concerned about the direct push-back of 108 migrants rescued by the Italian vessel Asso Ventotto on 30 July 2018 and immediately returned to Libya under the coordination of the Italian Coast Guard. We recall that this conduct blatantly violates the principle of non-refoulement and the prohibition of collective expulsions stemming from international and EU law.

This has been reaffirmed by the European Court of Human Rights in its landmark judgment of 23 February 2012 in the case of Hirsi Jamaa et al. v. Italy. The Court ruled on the extraterritorial application of the non-refoulement principle and found that Italy also violated the prohibition of collective expulsion when disembarking migrants to Libya without any form of examination of each applicant's individual circumstances.

As of today, 40 potential refugees stranded at sea for two weeks on board of the SAROST 5 are most probably about to be disembarked to Tunisia. We urge the European Parliament to take a resolute stand regarding past and future blockades of vessels at the Central Mediterranean and to insist on disembarkation to a place where people's dignity and protection can be fully guaranteed.

We would like to ask you to communicate an institutional response on these latest developments, and if necessary to coordinate with the Groups' Presidents a joint reaction of the European Parliament condemning the illegal push-backs of migrants and calling on EU Member States to cooperate in line with the principles of solidarity and responsibility sharing.

Kind regards,

Ska Keller
