Dear All,

The interest in even conducting the enclosed research comes from solid knowledge that Swedish Snus (which works) is almost completely harmless and that Nicotine Therapy from Pharma Industry (arguably works, for some) is also shown to be harmless.

Logical result: Tobacco/Nicotine in itself and properly prepared is not especially harmful. Smoking tobacco however kills 50% of it's users.

1. Solid normal product regulation for e-cigarettes (vigilantly monitored)
2. Lift the Ban on Swedish Snus (already produced according to Food Grade standard)
3. A 2050 plan for bringing cigarette smoking under 15% in Europe (50% decrease)
4. This should have been the TPD proposal from the get go, as it would have dramatically increased acceptance for harsher measures on the real culprit, cigarettes.

Now you have 2 choices, Kill the TPD (because it is simply ill prepared and bad policy) in it's current form, or (indirectly) kill more than 11 million smoking Europeans. I do not envy you the position you are in.

No interests declared within the EU and no economic or other remuneration had from any entity.
